Steve Smith serves Green Valley Hospice in Roseville, California, as a Chaplain and the Bereavement Coordinator, where he regularly visits with the community with individual and group sessions. His work “Grief Healings” offers care and comfort, and also guides people through life’s losses. Not all losses are losing a loved one, although this is a biggie! His perspective of common sense and practicality – sprinkled with a little humor – is a refreshing and healing way to change our outlook about losses.

Steve served most of his adult life as a student of people in the business arena of the corporate world and his own small family businesses. He and his wife Dale have five children and currently 14 grandchildren after 39 years of marriage. The death of Steve’s mother when he was a young man in college has given him a personal insight into grief. Losing his mom as a young adult gave him an appreciation for assisting others who are facing the death of a parent or grandparent.

Working with literally hundreds of family and loved ones after hospice service offers a great insight of how to use grieving as an opportunity to see ourselves and the events in our life paths for spiritual and personal growth. Grief Healings takes us beyond the “feeling better” part of the new reality after a loss and allows us to look at the potential of deeper healing and strength within ourselves. Grief and loss are an important part of life and offers us a cleansing and empowerment growth based on universal spiritual principles. Smith believes all of us have the power and strength to heal and improve our lives – through – the experience of grief and serves as a guide in this self-discovery journey of bereavement leading to peace, love and joy.
